This was considered a wrong to the Horoursos interest, and a determination was sown not to submit to it, while the Giddings sterest attempted to defend. A decision, however, was at length got, in accordance with palpuble right, at which Mr. KELLOGO, and several of the friends of Mr. Gronnes left the convention in a huff. Those who remained were disposed to treat in the matter, and asked for opporunity to consult. To this there was objection at first, but culmer councils prevailed, and an

The great question of the day is whether the Atlantic Telegraph can, after all, be rendered useful with the apparatus now at our command, or, indeed, with any apparatus. If it should turn out that, in the very nature of the case, dispatches cannot be transmitted with greater rapidity than fifty words an bourf, or example, a great disappointment will certainly be experienced on the part of the public as with as of the stockholders. On this head the experience of the telegraph lines laid d run in the Mediterranean is worthy of consideration. These were the longest submarine lines in existence previous to the great success of Mr. Field and his associates. From Cagliari in Sardinia to Malta the line is six hondred kilometres, or about three bundred and seventy-five miles; and that from Malta to Corfu is of about the same length.
